

CAN'T IDENTIFY SLAIN MAN OR FIND HIS SLAYER

Bath Beach Police Trying to Solve a Double Murder Mystery.

To find the man who shot and killed an unidentified companion the police of the Bath Beach station today organized a sort of identification jury, composed of four men who saw the companions and before whom all the suspects were taken.

The killing happened in front of the saloon of Vincenzo Caracio, at No. 149 Sixty-sixth street, Brooklyn, last night. Two men had been in the place drinking. At about 10 o'clock they began to quarrel, shouting curses at one another in Italian. They then left the place, and almost immediately a shot was heard.

Caracio, the proprietor, with several of his patrons, ran out. They found on the sidewalk one of the men who had been quarrelling, while they saw another, who looked like his companion, running away. The man on the sidewalk was mortally wounded by a bullet in the chest, but as he lay unconscious on the sidewalk he clutched in his right hand a long stiletto.

A lance surgeon arrived when an ambulance was necessary to pry his fingers loose to get the weapon. It was undisputed, no the police think he did not wound the other man. Those who were in the saloon said they had never before seen the two men. The police held as witnesses several persons who were loitering in the neighborhood were taken before them, but they failed to identify the shooter. Shortly before daylight to-day two men were picked up at Coney Island. One of them carried a revolver of which one chamber was empty. The identification jury again shook their heads, but the men were detained as suspicious persons.

The man who had the revolver, when arraigned in Coney Island Court to-day, said he was Luigi Azunzo, twenty-eight years old, and that he lived at Eighty-sixth street and Gravesend avenue. He said he exploded the cartridge in his revolver on Christmas Eve when celebrating. He was held on the charge of carrying concealed weapons. The others were discharged.

The dead man, on whose person no papers were found, was about thirty years old, five feet seven and one-half inches tall, weighed 160 pounds and was of swarthy complexion with black hair and mustache. He wore a black sack coat and black trousers beneath which were a second pair of trousers, which were gray with black stripes. His underclothing and outer shirt were white.

POLICE HEROES GET MEDALS AND CASH

Commissioner Bingham Presents Rewards of the Life-Saving Benevolent Assn.

Police Commissioner Bingham presented three medals and prizes of $25 each to-day to Patrolman Patrick H. Rice, of the police-boat patrol; John G. Kirk, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street station, and David M. Young, of the Hamilton avenue station, Brooklyn. The medals were bronze, and had been awarded by the Life-Saving Benevolent Association.

Rice jumped into the Hudson River from the Battery wall on Jan. 5 last and saved the life of five-year-old Martin Allen, of No. 21 West street. He has other medals he got for saving lives in the Slocum disaster. On Dec. 12, 1905, Policeman Kirk jumped from the foot of East One Hundred and Thirtieth street into the ice-filled river and rescued Joseph Yettman from drowning. Yettman was one of three occupants of a boat that had been run down by a tug. The tug crew managed to get the other men, and Yettman was drowning when Kirk reached him.

Young went overboard at Fort Hamilton on July 21 last, saving the life of Charles McGovern, of No. 240 Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, who fell off an excursion barge and was caught between a pier head and the boat.

In giving the money and medals to the men the Commissioner shook their hands warmly and said that it made him think better of the department when he had such a duty to perform. He said he hoped they were married, as their medals would be priceless heirlooms for their family.
